BONE REMODELING IN A PROXIMALLY HYDROXYAPATITE-COATED ANATOMIC FEMORA STEM: A 7.6-YEAR FOLLOW-UP PROSPECTIVE STUDY

Eduardo Garcia-Cimbrelo, Jose Cordero
Orthopaedic Department Hospital La Paz, Madrid, Spain

Introduction: We analyse a mid-term results in patients with a profile HA-coated anatomic stem (DePuy).

Material and Methods: 92 Profile stems, implanted between 1988-1996, originally with an ACS polyethylene (PE) liner (34 hips) and, after 1992, with a Duracon cup (58 hips). There were no infections. The mean follow-up was 7.6 years (4-11).

Results: There was thigh pain in 3 hips. All stems osseointegrated. 8 cups were revised after fracture of the ACS Liner; in one the stem required revision because of massive proximal osteolysis. Mean femoral filling was 93% with type A femur (funnel-shaped, 43 hips), 89% with type B (intermediate, 29 hips), and 81% with type C (cylindrical, 20 hips). Cortical hypertrophy (34 hips with a mean canal filling of 92%) and proximal osteoporosis (62 hips) were frequent. On the Engh scale, there was 18 grade 2 hips, 4 grade 3 hips, and 1 grade 4 hip. Osteoporosis was associated with stem width ($p < 0.05$). Proximal osteolysis (8 hips) was associated with rupture of the ACS liner (3 hips) and with PE wear greater than 2mm (5 hips). No distal osteolysis was found in this series.

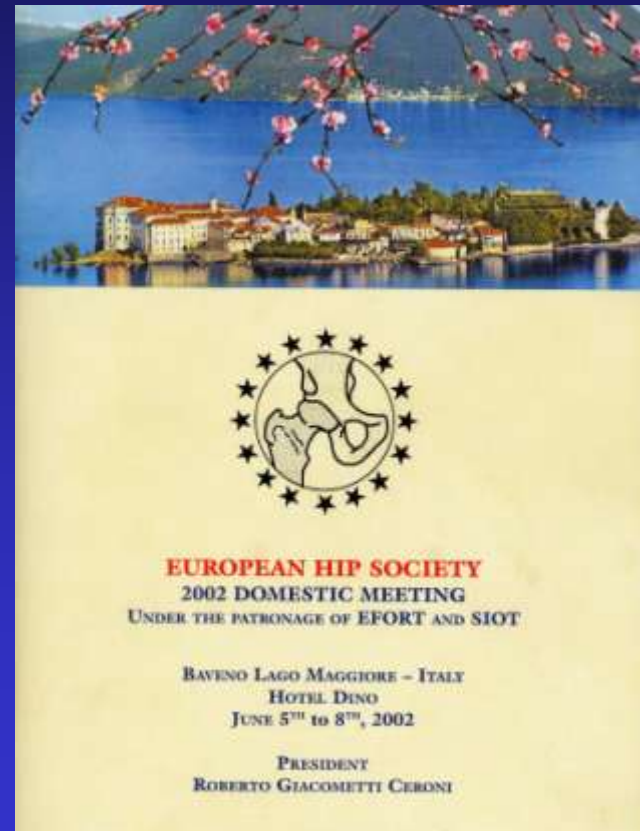

Conclusion: The Profile stem shows good mid-term results, even in osteopenic cylindrical femurs. Thigh pain is uncommon. Optimal press-fit was frequent. Radiographic ingrowth was seen in all hips. Proximal osteoporosis and cortical hypertrophy were frequent, and proximal osteolysis was associated to rupture or excessive wear of the PE liner.
